The New Law – Suggestions for Reforms and Improvements of Existing Legal Norms and Principles

Call for Papers

The graduate law conference is addressed to young academics and researchers who wish to pursue an academic career. The conference provides scholars with a unique forum to present their academic work, exchange innovative ideas and engage in a scholarly discussion. The potential participants are encouraged to use this opportunity to develop an international academic network to advance their careers.

We invite doctoral and post-doctoral candidates to submit abstracts for presentation at the conference and to join us in exchanging and discussing new ideas advancing existing law.

Theme

Laws are imperfect. Throughout the evolutionary development of law, many have struggled with unjust, impractical and obsolete laws, requiring practitioners and academics to search for the spirit of law when the letter of law was unclear or unfair, to seek alternative solutions when the legal rules did not keep pace with societal or technical developments or to look for equitable principles in the jungle of legal norms. These are only a few of the many problems legal scholars have faced and have overcome while influencing the process of reforming and improving the law.

The conference provides young scholars with an opportunity to combine the knowledge and experience of legal academics and practitioners with their legal know-how and creativity to think beyond the traditional legal models and to introduce significant innovative ideas advancing the existing body of law. Solutions to legal problems can be found by applying different approaches, reasoning or methodologies. Considering solutions designed by Roman lawyers or rules applicable in other jurisdictions to clarify existing, unresolved issues are just two of many possibilities to produce concepts reforming and improving current law.
The theme of this conference is not limited to a particular question or area of law, nor to a specific research approach. Legal problems discussed in the proposals can relate to regional, national or international issues. Proposals can focus on a specific problem and its resolution or on a theoretical discussion of reforms and improvements of a general nature. The substantive agenda for the conference will be determined by questions and topics most important to the graduate students wishing to participate.

Submissions

We encourage scholars to examine their research and think creatively about proposals on the conference theme. Please submit a 300-word abstract identifying the proposal’s field of law, with two descriptive keywords, and your personal data (full name, email address and affiliated university) to grad.conference@jura.uni-augsburg.de. The submission should identify a legal problem, propose a solution and indicate how the solution advances the current state of legal research and law. Submissions may be written in English or German.

We will acknowledge receipt of all proposals. Submissions from applicants without a valid university or institution email address will not be accepted.

The closing date for receipt of abstracts is January 30, 2016. Abstracts will be reviewed and approved based on their content. Successful applicants will be informed by February 20, 2016 and will be required to submit a minimum 2,000-word paper in advance of the conference by May 15, 2016. Papers must be in line with the concept provided in the submitted abstracts.

Papers presented at the conference will be published.

Those who do not wish to submit a paper are invited to join us in discussion at our Augsburg Graduate Conference in Law. Please register online prior to June 1, 2016.

Detailed information will be posted regularly on the Conference website at http://www.jura.uni-augsburg.de/gradconference.
